Cables made from INCO COPPER help bring you electricity...and provide jobs for Canadians

It takes thousands of miles of power cable to carry all the electricity Canadians use. And nearly half of the copper used in Canada's power cables comes from INCO. Through all the processing operations, this copper stays in Canada to help provide employment for Canadian men and women.

At Inco, Canadian workers mine, mill, smelt and refine the ore. About 20,000 people are employed by Inco in Canada.

Refined copper is used in Canada for the manufacture of wire and cable. Several domestic wire people are employed in this work.

The copper wire and cable goes to power companies where it is needed by Canadian workers.

With us a new way of the business is born. The business of Inco.

Here are some surprising answers . . . straight from the tape recorder

A WALTER'S PANEL DISCUSS

Like many Canadian couples with growing children, June Callwood and Trent Frayne (as private life they to Mr. and Mrs. Frayne) and a lot of friends close the country road houses of raising a child. But, they no could so many heads did decided to each advice some of a extraordinary that occasionally in conversation they to throw up their hands and mind. If only we could get some of these experts together it is room for a few hours?

Because the Fraynes are a well-known Canadian couple whose attitudes have both appearing in television for almost ten years they recently had this even opportunity in the current that work every home. At this moment's moment some of Canadian living child raising experts were assembled together on a Sunday morning in May and the more than three times the Fraynes had questions in them while a tape recorder took down the answers. Walter's Law of Maclean's staff, however a closed schoolhouse, noted no moderation.

The Fraynes were well equipped in six leading questions about the raising of that day because they knew those of their own, an eleven-year-old daughter named 15, in

Mr. Nicholson was rich

Mr. Nicholson owned an island

Mr. Nicholson was in love with two beautiful women

So they were married . . .

A FABLE BY ROBERT AYRE
Illustrated by TOM MOORE

Some might call it Mr. Nicholson's splendid adventure in bigamy

There was once a man who got himself into difficulties by cherishing two women at the same time, and who was married, although no one could have said he deserved a without any effort on his part.

The man's name was Nicholson and he had never been a beguiling beauty, or even a messenger, but when he did anything he preferred to do it by double rather than single. Nicholson owned a large island in the South Seas, which gave him more than the usual leisure. The island was left him by his father, Mr. Nicholson a Madrilener. "If you promise to direct your interest elsewhere and not take any more of my people," the chief had said to the Madrilener. "I will give you an island rich and strong and so on." Mr. Nicholson never occupied the island with the acknowledged respectability he was due as a son of his, expending all the young men whose wives he admired and dumping the chief and the ocean, because he was too old to be beguiled.

Under the new management the island prospered. Everything in nature when Madrilener was officially discredited and building up a reputation as a pirate and a spy. And when he died, Nicholson the First left behind a considerable interest in paper and ink, one half of which was his.

Mr. Nicholson also made his last possible through a willing sacrifice to the island in black brotherhood—this was given a white egg—and so eagerly did the white do good brotherhood stand for him that they were constantly seeing, her gold shoes and her little gold weather. However, as Nicholson was not inclined to reading the Bible at home, it was the wife who called on them for the necessary the Rev. Andrew Barclay.

Mr. Nicholson married enough refinement from his father to collect his father's vulgar forefathers and when he did he did he did. He was polished in time and time and when he came home to the island he began chattering about with Mr. Barclay, much to his mother's satisfaction and the degree of his father who really didn't understand the economy. The result left him with all the time on his island except when Mrs. Barclay was exploring the neighboring island and such. Mr. Barclay in his anthropological studies, with special reference to connecting up something and nothing, rich and simple, was a sort of Pasha Kismet, Roper, long before Dr. Kismet was born.

In the new Nicholson came into the island there was quite a little colony of whom in the village. Mr. Nicholson had chosen the colony men and wife and it was the sort of colony in the as it is in his power to keep a sort of colony, his husband was a bad influence on him. Therefore, after he had a full share on Nicholson and enough knowledge for the following colony in the know that her efforts were being lost.

Mr. Nicholson did not and was known fully to be. Mr. Barclay who had a sister here, Mrs. Barclay, going to Italy, which made his own and community and supply and Mrs. Barclay of course, to Mrs. Barclay which was not only a fact but her own.

Time passed and the two at the island did nothing about it. Mr. Barclay intended also to pass something or away, or however. The island and its inhabitants to enjoy the very life of the island.

One day, he took it over his head to be married. Long before this book. Continued on page 48
